VOLUME LXIX., NUMBER 17. REDWOOD CITY, SAN MATEO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA, FRIDAY, AUGUST 3, 1928. ESTABLISHED IN 1859.

HORSE SHOW WILL SURPASS THAT OF PREVIOUS SEASON

What is presumed in advance to be the best horse show of modern times will open at Palo Alto with a matinee at 2:15 tomorrow afternoon, August 4th. Nightly performances will prevail except Sunday until Saturday, August 11th, with a second matinee on Friday the 10th.

Possibly never before, anywhere, have so many horses of highest quality in all divisions been gathered together at one show. The entries number 699 and the accommodations for horses have had to be increased by almost one hundred stalls over last year's complement, making a total of 288, every one of which will be occupied.

Henry Collins, prominent breeder and expert of Devon, Pa., who has often officiated on the coast and is very popular as an arbiter, will tie the ribbons on saddle and harness classes. Marco H. Hellman of Los Angeles will judge the $1,000 stake which he has donated and the other classes for stock horses, and E. Allen Russell of Los Angeles, noted rider and devotee of the hunting field, will tie the hunters and jumpers.

Mrs. W. P. Roth of San Francisco and Woodside, is president of the Northern California Horse Show Association, which sponsors the show. Atholl McBean of San Francisco, vice-president, G. Albert Lansburgh, treasurer and A. P. Fleming, secretary-manager.

A permanent location has been allotted the association on Stanford campus, in a wonderful setting amongst the live oaks at the south end of the university grounds adjoining the aviation field.

Last year the Palo Alto horse show was pronounced by experts to have been one of the most beautiful of out door affairs of its kind. This year's will not only be more perfect in setting but larger and of much higher quality.

Many noted exhibitors will show who were absent last year. Among them, E. A. Stuart of Seattle, with 30 horses, almost half of them recently imported from England. Mrs. Harry G. Goelitz of Wheaton, Illinois, brings 8 harness ponies. John Hubly of Mason City, Ill., as fifteen of which 5 are roadsters of blue ribbon quality. The Raven Mfg. Co. of Council Bluffs, Ia., sends harness ponies. Alice and Marjorie Marston of San Diego. Mary and Elizabeth Leonard of Pasadena, Mrs. D. F. Fesler, Miss Marian and Lucile Fontaine Fesler of Los Angeles, Miss Harriett Holbrook, Coronado, Miss Patricia Clark of San Mateo. Mrs. Geo. W. Bowles, Mrs. Florence Lowe Barnes,, Mrs. Emily Canfield and T. E. Shumate of San Francisco are all new exhibitors with three and five gaited saddle horses.

Louis Oneal, San Jose, Phil O'Connell and H. V. Phillips, Stockton, 143 Field Artillery, Oakland, Egan Bros., Napa W. J. Hunkin Mountain View; Chas L. Shuey, Oakland; L. B. Wickersheim, Mayfield are new exhibitors with hunters, jumpers, stock horses and polo ponies.

The Stuart stable is the largest in America, others of the new comers are also of prime importance wherever they exhibit. Horses not found good enough to compete last year will be absent but the places will be more than filled by ones of better quality.

The forthcoming show should establish Palo Alto on a firm and permanent basis as one of the outstanding horse shows of America.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Poole and little daughter, Jaqueline, returned this week from a pleasant vacation spent in Plumas county.

B. E. Myers is Speaker on City Manager

B. E. Myers, city treasurer, was the speaker at the weekly meeting of the Redwood City Promotion Association. Myers spoke on the subject of city government, particularly the city manager type of government which is being adopted by many cities throughout the country.

Myers impressed his hearers with the advantages of this type of government for Redwood City. This city, he said, has grown beyond the village stage, and its citizens should give some thought toward remodeling the government to keep pace with the growth of the city.

Y. M. I Rodeo Draws Crowds To Coastside

Preceded by a colorful parade, headed by Dan Woods and his ancient stage coach, the Y. M. I. rodeo at Halfmoon Bay last Sunday was an entire success. About two thousand persons gathered at the Cunha ranch, near Halfmoon Bay for the events which was preceeded Saturday night by a cowboy dance.

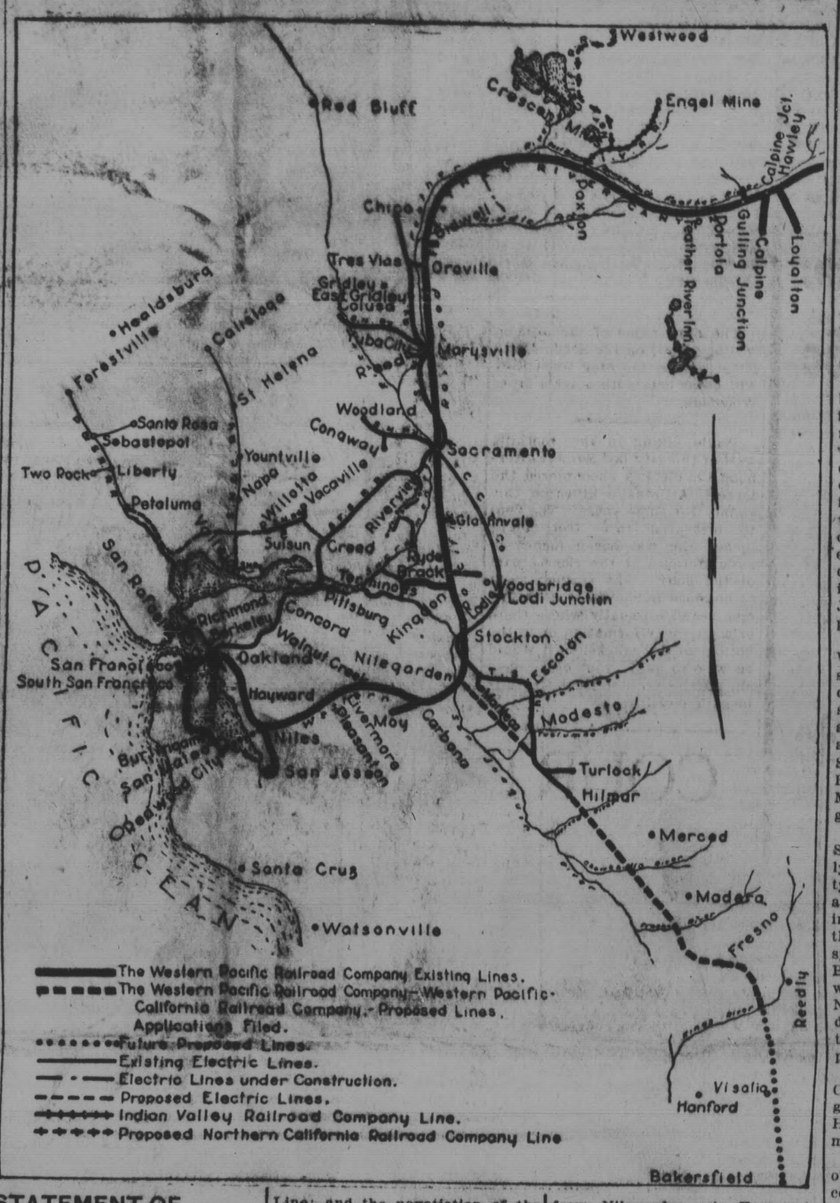
The first prize for roaping went to Joe Higgins of Salinas, while Art Hill and Bill Weidemen tied for first place in bronco busting. The Redwood City relay team, consisting of O. McCue, Dan Foley and M. Flynn won first place in the relay race.

Dan Foley of this city was the only one who managed to stay on the bucking bronco, while he and McCue made good at riding wild steers. Dan Woods acted as master of the ring and performed in a very creditable manner.

Joe Ross was given much applause for his trick poney and was also winner of the pony race. Carol Hinman of this city proved to be the star calf rider and an amusing feature was furnished by Yakima Bill with his clown acts.

Several of the would-be riders were given hard knocks but none received any serious injury.

Where Western Pacific Trains Will Soon Run



STATEMENT OF PLANS ISSUED BY WESTERN PACIFIC

Extension of Lines To Affect All Parts Of Central California

SHORTENS DISTANCE

Involves Changes In Utah and Nevada

An official statement of the Western Pacific together with the map of the routes to be utilized in the expansion program of that company was made public this week by the company. It is estimated by the company that the developments now planned will shorten the route from here to Denver by 200 miles. A considerable shortening of the distance from here to Sacramento is also planned.

Important developments this week in the expansion scheme of the Western Pacific which will include a line along the peninsula from here to San Francisco are: The application of the Sacramento Northern Railway, controlled by the Western for a permit from the Interstate Commerce Commission to purchase the San Francisco---Sacramento Railway, known as the Sacramento Short Line; and the negotiation of the Western Pacific and the Denver & Rio Grande for use of the Moffat Tunnel in Colorado which would shorten the line into Denver by 200 miles.

The statement of the Western Pacific was in part as follows:

"The Western Pacific Ry. embraces an independent, competing transcontinental railroad system operating a through route from San Francisco and Oakland via Stockton and Sacramento and thence via Marysville, Oroville and the Feather river canyon through Nevada to Salt Lake City, where it connects with the Denver & Rio Grande Western and the Union Pacific for eastern points, also with local Utah lines.

"The Western Pacific California Ry. Co., recently incorporated, which is a subsidiary of the Western Pacific, proposes to construct a line of railroad from San Francisco to Redwood City, and from Nilegarden via Fresno to Kings river.

"Existing lines and branches of the Western Pacific in California are shown on the map in heavy black lines. The Sacramento Northern, Tidewater Southern and the Sacramento Short Line are indicated by narrow black lines.

"The Central California Traction Ry. is shown by an alternately blocked double line. A dash and dot line traces the Holland branch of the Sacramento Northern now under construction. Broken lines indicate lines of railroad to be constructed as follows:

"Twenty-five miles by the Western Pacific California from San Francisco to Redwood City.

"One hundred thirty-eight miles by the Western Pacific California from Nilegarden via Fresno to Kings river.

"1.77 miles of belt line connections by the Western Pacific in Oakland and Alameda.

"3 1-2 miles by the Western Pacific from Brack easterly.

"7 1-2 miles by the Sacramento Northern from a junction with its Holland branch to Ryde.

"7 1-2 iles by the Sacramento Northern from its Vaca Valley lines to Creed on the Sacramento Short Line.

"36 miles by the Sacramento Northern from a point near Willotta on its Vaca Valley line to Petaluma, this being contingent upon acquisition of the Petaluma & Santa Rosa Ry. by the Western Pacific.

Steamer Line Operated

"Light lines show the Petaluma & Santa Rosa Ry., which also operate a steamer line between San Francisco and Petaluma, and the San Francisco, Napa & Calistoga Ry.

"The Western Pacific, already heavily interested, has purchased one-half interest in the Alameda Belt Line and has made a contract to purchase the Union Belt Ry. of Oakland. The Interstate Commerce Commission has heard the application for the necessary certificate of public convenience and necessity.

"As the map is confined to Western Pacific lines in California it does not show its lines in Nevada or Utah nor does it show the connection which the Western Pacific is about to construct between its main line and the Oregon Short Line at Wells, Nev. This connection will afford in central California and points in Idaho and Montana."

Japanese Growers Greet Representative Of Japanese Consul

K. Nakashima, secretary to the Honorable Morikazu Ida, consul general of Japan to San Francisco was greeted by members of the Peninsula Chrysanthemum Growers Association Wednesday afternoon at Belmont. A reception had been planned for the consul general, but as he was unavoidably detained in San Francisco, he was represented by his secretary.

An elaborate program was arranged in the newly completed warehouse of the association at Belmont. Light refreshments were served on an artistically decorated table where many types of the choicest blooms of the peninsula were on exhibition.

In addition to the members of the association and their honored guest many representatives of business organizations of the peninsula were present. T. CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

Major R. Y. Stuart, newly appointed United States forester, will arrive in California this week to confer with State authorities on conservation matters. Stuart and S. B. Show, U. S. district forester for California and Nevada, are to meet at Sacramento with Fred G. Stevenot, State Director of Natural Resources, and State Forester M. B. Pratt.

The approach of the hunting season is evident from the activity on the rifle and pistol ranges of all Northern California clubs. Deer season in fish and game districts 2, 2½ and 3 open August 1. These districts include the Coast Range counties from the northern boundary of Mendocino county to the southern boundary of Ventura county.

The initiative measure to abolish prize fighting in California qualified last week for a place on the November general election ballot. Petitions received by Secretary of State Frank C. Jordan from seven counties swelled the number of initiative signers to 94,539, or 3,010 more than were needed to place the proposition before the voters.

Supplying an important highway link between San Francisco, the peninsula and Alameda county, is the San Francisco Bay Bridge, now under construction across the bay between San Mateo, on the west and Mt. Eden, near Hayward, on the east. The structure, which will cost about $7,500,000, will be 7.1 miles in length, exclusive of approaches, and will be the longest highway bridge in the world. The project is now about 35 per cent complete, and is scheduled to be finished and opened to traffic in June 1929.

Nearly $83,000 in delinquent wages was collected for California workmen during June through the law enforcement activities of the State department of industrial relations. Will J. French, director of the department, told the governor's council a few days ago that 2,624 wage complaints were received and investigated, together with 275 alleged violations of the eight-hour law for women, resulting in 138 criminal prosecutions.

Employment conditions in California this summer are practically the same as they were a year ago, as shown by statistics of the State department of industrial welfare. Representative industrial establishments throughout the State which employed 154,494 workmen in June, 1927, employed 152,828 workers in June, 1928. This represents a decrease of 1.1 per cent. In June, 1927, the weekly payroll was $4,533,609 and in June of this year $4,456,684, a drop of 1.7 per cent. The "average workman" in these industrial establishments found $29.36 in his weekly pay envelope in June this year with $29.34 in June, 1927.

An additional tax of $5 on all California motor car owners, as an insurance fund for dependants of auto traffic victims, is being considered by the State committee on uniform traffic laws, appointed by the 1927 Legislature. This was disclosed a few days ago by Edgar C. Levey, speaker of the Assembly, and chairman of the traffic committee, before the session of the third annual convention of the Municipal Traffic League of California held last week. An additional tax of $5 would create a fund of $10,000,000 annually, to be administered by a State commission or the industrial insurance department, declared Levy.

Physicians, surgeons and scientific and welfare workers of international reputation will participate in the thirtieth annual convention of the American Hospital Association to be held in San Francisco August 6 to 10. Attendance will be drawn from Canada, Australia and Latin America as well as the United States. In conjunction with the hospital association conclave there will be conventions of the Children's Hospital Association, the Hospital Dietetic Council, the American Association of Hospital Social Workers, the American Occupational Therapy Association and other special groups. Arrangements are being made to accommodate more than 5000 delegates.

Arrests and fines for violations of California's fish and game laws practically doubled during the first six months of 1928 as compared with a similar period in 1927. This is shown in a report compiled by Fred G. Stevenot, State director of natural resources. For the past half-year 1,146 hunters and fishermen were apprehended and paid fines aggregating $39,319. In the same period last year, 628 persons ran afoul of the fish and game laws and paid out fines in the total sum of $20,955. Stevenot expressed the opinion that the sharp increase in the number of proven violators did not indicate growing lawlessness among the sportsmen of the State, but rather increasing vigilance on the part of the patrol officers of the fish and game commission.

Intimating that a special session of the Legislature would be held early in September and definitely stating for the first time that such a session was certain, Governor C. C. Young told newspaper men last week that the State faced a loss of approximately $10,000,000 within the next year if a special session was not held. "There will be a special session of the Legislature held to consider the bank tax and intangible securities problem," the governor said, "if I can be assured that the matter can be settled without controversy."

California's new hospital for the treatment of narcotic addicts, located near Pomona, is to receive its first patients this week. This is announced by Earl E. Jensen, director of the State department of institutions. First inmates of the institution are to be recruited from addicts now housed in the other State hospitals. Jensen stated that for the time being, at least, it will be necessary for the regular state hospitals to continue to receive a few addicts because of the inadequacy of facilities at the Pomona institution to take care of all the commitments.

Tourists are entering California this summer at the rate of 2,613 a day, according to statistics announced recently by Frank Snook, chief of the State division of motor vehicles. Figures, based on a check made by officers of Snook's division on the six main interstate highways show that 871 cars enter the State daily on the average with three persons to a car.

Forty-one veteran California school teachers, all of whom have taught 30 years or more, have been retired by the state on the full $500 annual pension allowance. Sixteen others who have taught less than the required 30 years for retirement have been relieved of their duties because of illness or other disabilities, and have been pensioned according to the number of years taught.

Five million matches a day by the end of 1929 is to be the output of a $500,000 match factory to be built in San Francisco, according to Thomas Allen Box of Sausalito. The new factory will begin to operate in July, 1929, with an initial production of 2,500,000 matches a day and with about 100 men on its payroll.

Automobile deaths in California show an increase of ninety and motor vehicle accidents a gain of 1,200 for the first six months of this year, as compared with the corresponding months of 1927. Alexander R. Heron, State Director of Finance, so reported last week to Governor Young and his cabinet. During the last six months there have been 879 deaths and 9,500 auto accidents, Heron said, the totals for the first half of 1927 being 789 deaths and 8,300 accidents.

In "Murderers' Row" at Folsom and San Quentin penitentiaries, fifteen men are facing the gallows, the largest number awaiting execution at any one time in recent California prison annals. Warden James B. Holohan has nine slayers on the condemned list at San Quentin, according to a report to Governor Young, and Warden Court Smith has six others at Folsom. The first scheduled to die at San Quentin is Mark Dowell, murderer of a San Francisco police officer. His execution date has been set for August 17. The same date has been named for the hanging of Folsom's six Thanksgiving Day rioters, recently convicted of murdering a fellow convict during the bloody prison mutiny last November.

Either the ranks of California bootleggers are growing tremendously or the law enforcement efficiency of peace officers is decidedly on the increase. Whichever it is, the number of prohibition law arrests for the 1927-28 fiscal year just ended was 4,762, or eight times as great as that for 1923-24. Morrill's reports on prohibition arrests for the last five fiscal years were given as follows: 1923-24, 546; 1924-25, 1,272; 1925-26, 1,707; 1926-27, 2,065; 1927-28, 4,762.

In another effort to find trace of Jack Frost and Gordon Scott, lost during the Dole race in August, 1927, Denham Scott, brother of the navigator, started a few days ago from Honolulu to search the lava wastes of Mauna Loa on the island of Hawaii. Scott led a party of four men, among whom was Private Scarborough of the Fifth Infantry, who declares that he saw a flare in the region at the time the flyers might have been there. The searchers carried provisions for two weeks.

Plans for State registration of California airplanes and pilots were announced at Sacramento last week. All aircraft and aviators not operating under authority of the United States government are subject to licensing by the State Division of Motor Vehicles, and steps are being worked out to enforce a law along these lines, it was disclosed by Alexander R. Heron, State director of finance. An aviation regulatory measure passed by the Legislature of 1921 is subject to enforcement, according to an opinion by the Attorney-General, the license fee for planes being $5 a year and that for pilots $2.

The tentative budget of the California National Guard for the next biennium provides for a $150,000 allotment for the purchase of the guard camp site near San Luis Obispo. At present the encampment grounds are being held and improved under a 25-year lease and an option to purchase at any time in that period. The State now intends to exercise the option at a price that was not disclosed in State circles. While the State of California would acquire the grounds, which contain approximately 2,000 acres, the program of permanent improvements there is being financed by the federal government.

Capt. John N. Jeffers, D. S. C., of Los Angeles, was a few days ago appointed by Adjutant General R. E. Mittelstaedt as commander of the Fortieth Division Air Squadron, National Guard, succeeding Maj. C. E. Moseley of Los Angeles, resigned. Captain Jeffers, who has been second in command at the State Air Force's Griffith Field headquarters, was a lieutenant in Capt. Eddie Rickenbacher's squadron during the World War, it was announced, and received the Distinguished Service Cross for heroism in a combat with ten German planes.

California is shortly to be called upon to contribute its quota of $150,000 toward erection of a $5,000,000 American shrine to William Shakespeare. Dr. Willett E. Dentinger, founder and director general of the International Shakespeare Association, is in San Francisco to confer with Mrs. Joan H. Woodbury, fifth vice president. Mrs. Woodbury is chairman of the California committee. The object of the fund is to provide not only a shrine, but a national Shakespearian theater, a traveling company of stars in the classical drama and a free school for deserving young actors.

California purchasers of doubtful securities were reimbursed to the amount of $71,390 during June, according to the monthly report of the State Corporation Department. Twenty-one brokers' licenses were issued during the month, while 555 agents were granted permission to transact business in the State.

POULTRY

SKIM MILK FOR HENS IS FAVORED

Skim milk is great pig feed, but the man who feeds the milk to his hens and takes his profit in the form of increased egg yields is the one who makes the most money from his milk, according to Iowa State college poultrymen.

Seven years of continuous experimentation at the college has proved that milk, when fed to poultry, will return from three to six times as much profit as when fed to pigs. It has also been found that, when eggs are selling for not less than 30 cents a dozen, skim milk is worth around $2 a hundredweight as feed for good pullets. There is practically no difference between the value of skim milk and buttermilk for poultry, repeated tests have revealed.

When hens fed tankage or meat meals as their main source of protein were compared with those that also had milk, it was found that the milk-fed birds outlayed the tankage-fed birds by 25 to 40 per cent during cold weather. Milk should always be fed sour because birds will consume more of it in this condition, it has a slightly laxative effect and the lactic acid combats many disease germs.

From October 1 to May 1 it is profitable to give the hens nothing but milk to drink and from May 1 to October 1 they may be allowed to choose between milk and water. When birds are given all of the milk they will drink, the amount of tankage or other packing house by-products may be reduced one-half, for milk furnishes one-half the protein necessary for laying hens. The Iowa poultry specialists advise the keeping of only as many birds as can be supplied with milk.

Laying Hens Need Moist Mash in Warm Weather

Summer feeding of farm poultry can be carried on economically and to good advantage, says Cora Cooke, extension poultry specialist at the university of Minnesota. The amount of feed required on the average farm is less than in winter, a higher production can be counted upon, and prices of eggs are usually ascending after the low period caused by the spring surplus. The specialist points out that the cost of the ration can be reduced by cutting down the meat scrap one-half and omitting it altogether if plenty of milk is available, and also by reducing the amount of corn and, in the case of dual purpose flocks, omitting it entirely. "The principal thing to look out for is that plenty of mash is used," he says. "As warm weather comes on a moist mash once a day will do wonders in keeping up egg production. Hens that molt early should be disposed of before poultry prices drop in the early fall." Reports of storage conditions presage a favorable season, says Miss Cooke. A recent report said that 13 per cent fewer eggs and 39 per cent less dressed poultry are in storage than a year ago.

Marking Broody Hens to Cull From Laying Flock

There is a wide variation in the amount of broodiness in hens in the same flock. Some lay a comparatively few eggs between spells of broodiness. Others go broody rarely if at all. An excellent practice is to mark through some method or other the number of times the hens become broody during the season.

A simple and yet effective method is to use celluloid rings to slip on their legs. A bunch of rings of one color can be used, thus leaving other colors for other marks if desired. Each time a hen is placed in the broody coop or set, if the chicks are hatched and raised with hens, a ring can be placed on her leg. Any hen that accumulates more than two before midsummer could be culled from the flock. Frequently a hen will go broody every two or three weeks, even when she is placed in the broody coop at the first sign of broodiness. Such should be sold or eaten at the third attack.

Proteins in Whey

Whey contains milk sugar, fat, minerals, and proteins of very high quality. It is therefore an excellent feed for poultry. However, it contains only about 6.6 per cent of dry matter, therefore it is difficult for a hen, with her limited capacity, to consume enough to supply her wants. Keep the usual feeds before the hen, so that she will be sure to get enough to eat. Since the whey contains so much water, it would be well to take away other sources of water.

Poultry Prospects

Says the Massachusetts Agricultural college: "The outlook for egg, broiler and poultry prices is slightly better than in 1927. Feed costs on the other hand are expected to continue high, at least during the first half of the year." We've covered nine sheets of paper trying to figure out whether that's intended as encouraging or discouraging, says the Farm Life. Our own opinion is that poultry looks better this year than last, and we're going right ahead for a better flock.

Keep Chicks "Coming"

It pays to keep the chicks "coming" at all times. Too many people get a chick nicely started and then because of high feed prices discontinue proper feeding. The most profitable chick is the one correctly fed at all times. Good rations, formulas of which the college will furnish, may be mixed at home at a reasonable price. Do not force your chicks to rustle for a living if you ever expect a return from them. They will soon quit profitable laying.

English Justice Does Away With Precedents

There was a time when in the chancery courts written evidence in the form of affidavits was considered by the practitioners who drafted and settled these statements to suit their clients' contentions, as having superior value to the oral testimony of our common law tribunals. Mr. Justice Mathew abolished this heresy in a phrase when he said, with contemptuous irony, "Truth will leak out even in an affidavit."

The same learned judge, too, gave a witty reproof to a learned counsel famous for prolixity who applied to him for an order that the other side should file "further and better particulars."

"H'm!" said Mathew, "Further and better particulars! 'Further,' I suppose, because they are further from the point than the former ones, and 'better' because they cost more. Certainly not."—London Tit-Bits.

Spain Yields War Trophies

Spain has demonstrated its effusive friendship for its emancipated former dominions by voluntarily surrendering to Cuba flags, banners, pistols, swords and other war trophies captured by the Spanish troops from the Cuban rebels. Prominent among these emblems is the banner of independence raised by Carlos Maria Cespedes, the great patriot, during the ten years' war in 1868. The trophies figured for many years in the Artillery museum at Madrid. Senor Garcia Kholy, Cuban ambassador, gave an entertainment at which these emblems were exhibited before being sent to Cuba. Spanish pride is certainly making concessions in order to secure the good will of Cuba.

Transportation

IT is not quite 65 year ago that the first steam train slowly puffed its way from San Francisco to Mayfield and then returned. Many people still living remember that day on October 16, 1863, when the portion of the great continental line through here was finished as far as Mayfield and a great celebration took place. A account of that event appearing in this paper at that time was in part as follows:

"On Saturday last the western portion of what is to be the great transcontinental railroad was formally open from San Francisco to Mayfield. An excursion train, consisting of six passenger cars and a number of freight cars drawn by two splendid locomotives and carrying some four hundred passengers, ran from San Francisco to Mayfield, then returned to San Francisquito Creek and joind in a picnic gotten up by the managers under the immediate supervision of our friend and patron, Saulman—than whom none could have done it better.

The locomotives are first class and the cars are gotten up after the most approved style of the east.

"On Sunday two trains ran each way and since then trains have run regularly on schedule time—one train each way daily, arriving here from the city at 10 and leaving for the city at 11 a. m.  When the road is opened through to San Jose, no doubt the company will find it to its advantage to run two trains a day each way and then we can go which ever way we please and return the same day."

Prior to that time transportation had been slow even compared to the transportation afforded by the slow trains of that time. Travel to San Francisco from Redwood City had been by means of two stage lines which made one trip daily, but who advertised that stages did not run in bad weather. Residents of San Francisco or the northern part of the county who had business in the county seat, could figure on spending at least two nights here, and the hotels reaped a harvest.

How impossible the peninsula of today would be if people still had to spend a day going to or from San Francisco and another day on the return trip. Where would be our great commuting population? our industrial development? even our home town business? All are founded on quick transportation.

The better the transportation of a section, the greater will be its progress. This is amply illustrated in the growth of the east-bay communities. Even with the progress which has been made on the peninsula since the stage made its daily trip in good weather, this section of the state has lacked the type of transportation which assures the greatest possible development.

We now have that type of development in sight. With the Western Pacific practically a certainty along the industrially available bay shore, and with three great trunk highways underway the full length of the county to furnish easy egress for truck loads of county produce, with one bay bridge completed and another nearing completion to tap the rich agricultural section of the San Joaquin and Sacramento valleys, San Mateo county is just beginning to secure the transportation which it has needed these many years. With these facts assured it is hard to overestimate the changes which will have occured before some future editor looks back 65 years to the day when the first Western Pacific train passes through Redwood City.

We'd Rather Fish

IT is supposed, at least to be the ambition of every American boy to be president of the United States. A laudable ambition, truly. But as we watch presidential candidates come and go and see the sacrifice of personal liberty which each must make in order to gain his boyhood ambition, we are rather tempted to forego our unalienable right to be president some day and content ourselves with a lesser sphere.

We have in mind Herbert Hoover. However, much we may envy that great man his splendid position in the world and his bright future, when it comes to fishing or taking a quiet walk in the evening we'd rather be just Bill Jones or Tom Smith.

The American people and the American press have become idol worshipers, and however flattering the popularity may be, it certainly doesn't improve a fishing trip. Not a-tall.

TALKING PICTURES TO BE INSTALLED ON PENINSULA

Arkush Theatres To Be Equipped With Machines

Talking moving pictures will soon be available in the theatres of the Arkush circuit including houses in Palo Alto, Redwood City, San Mateo and Burlingame, according to an announcement made this week by the Arkush interests. The installation of Vitaphone and Movietone equipment to produce the talking pictures will be made in all the Arkush theatres including the new house now under construction here. The first house to be equipped with the new machines is to be the Peninsula theatre in Burgame. Contracts for installing the two types of speaking equipment were signed Saturday by Ellis J. Arkush. The contracts are said to total $25,000 for this house.

Actual installation will take place some time in December, the delay being occasioned by the fact that the very intricate and difficult installation of this marvelous invention has caught the motion picture world entirely unprepared, and it has been found necessary to establish schools to train expert mechanicians in the installation of this equipment, and until a sufficient number of these highly trained men are turned out, the theaters of America will have to await their turn.

"The Vitaphone and Movietone are expected to revolutionize the entire motion picture industry, and it would not surprise me greatly if every first-class motion picture theater in America would be equipped to show 'sight and sound' pictures inside of three years," said Arkush in an interview this week.

"At present the Peninsula theater will be the only house on our circuit, comprising theaters in Palo Alto, San Mateo, Redwood City and Burlingame, to put in this latest form of entertainment, but all of the theaters are to be wired in readiness to receive a like equipment when further contracts are signed.

"Although Vitaphone and Movietone are practically in their infacy, great strides have already been made since 1926, when sound pictures first became practical. Syncronism, the art of blending sight with sound, has already become so nearly perfected that one is easily made to imagine that the sound of the voice, the music or sound effect is actually coming from the person or object being shown on the screen."

According to Arkush, every big picture producing company is already making "sight and sound" movies for the coming season, and the installation of the Vitaphone and Movietone machines at the Peninsula will be completed just in time to take care of these new productions.

Candidate's Merits Impressed on Voter

A majority of the voters in San Mateo county are paying heavy sums in tax money on their homes It is well for these voters to consider how much it means to have the right man on the job in the state legislature.

Many thousand bills are introduced each session which affect the welfare and prosperity of every citizen. Many of these bills, if enacted into law, would add heavy burdens of taxation to the taxpayer, and indirectly to every purchaser of homes or commodities. Many of these bills would hamper and harass our citizens in their daily pursuit of life, liberty and happiness.

Our representative in the Assembly must study and understand the needs and problems of San Mateo county, and must be a man of business experence and with varied contacts. He must also have the courage of his convictions and backbone enough to stand and fight for the interests of the people he represents.

Assemblyman Parkman has taken special interest in educational affairs. One of the outstanding things of the many that have been accomplished through his efforts is the law that makes it possible, through special training and assistance, to aid children having defective speech. There are more than 250,000 of these little ones in the state having noticeable speech defects who by a wonderful piece of constructive legislation it is now possible to help. The defective speech of these little children is corrected by proper care and training and they are given the same chance in life as those more fortunately favored.

The personality and ability of Assemblyan Parkman was recognized by the administration in his appointment on the many important legislative committees, such as Ways and Means, which handles the budget and finances of the state, the committee of Revenue and Taxation, Commerce and Navigation, a committee of tremendous importance to our county: Banking, Public Health and Quarantine, Insurance, Oil Industries and Direct Legislation. Through his efforts seperal bills, which would have been detrimental to the interest of the tax payers were defeated.

Special Rates To Hoover Nomination

August 11 will be added to the list of California's historical dates. On that date one of the largest crowds ever gatherel on the Pacific coast will be amply provided for, according to the plans now being made for the presidential nomination ceremony at Stanford University Stadium at which Herbert Hoover will make his first address in the campaign for election to the presidency of the United States. The ceremony will begin at 3:30 p. m. and the speech of acceptance will be made at 4 o'clock.

Never before has a resident west of the Mississippi river been notified of such distinguished nomination. California will witness an event of historical significance but without historical precedence. All citizens of the state are invited to the event which will have its setting on the campus of Leland Stanford University. The stadium has a seating capacity of approximately 90,000. Electric amplifiers will be placed outside of the stadium to accommodate overflow attendance.

Special trains to handle the delegates and visitors to and from the stadium will be run by the Southern Pacific at a special fare of $1.00 for the round trip from San rancisco. From other points in the state the railroad will place in effect regular summer excursion rates to San Francisco, where passengers may purchase the special $1.00 round trip ticket to Palo Alto.

STATE LEADS NATION IN ANNULMENTS

One Third of Country's Number Occur In California

By ESTO BROUGHHTON
(Staff Correspondent)

SACRAMENTO,, August 2 — The changing of matrimonial minds has reached the highest marriage annulment rate of any state.

In fact more than one-third of all the marriages terminated by annulment in the United States occur in California, according to a survey of the national matrimonial situation just completed by the federal bureau of the census and reported today to L. E. Ross, California's vital statistician.

For out of a total of only 3,825 annulments granted in the last twelve months in the nation, California claims 1282 or more than New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania put together.

Of this number the county of San Mateo has contributed 14 annulments, while it has parted by divorce 104 couples, representing a gain over the previous year's record of 91. More annulments occured, for instance, in each of the counties of Fresno, San Joaquin, Contra Costa, Riverside, San Mateo, Santa Clara, Santa Cruz and Tulare for the year compiled than in each of the states of Rhode Island Vermont, North Dakota and Delaware.

"The Enoch Arden Act" of New York granting an annulment for abandonment causes that state to rank second with 964 annulments reported. But this high record is balanced by its low divorce rate, while California although it is outclassed by Nevada in divorces still maintains a high divorce as well as the highest annulment ratio.

"Out where the west begins" apparently husbands and wives tire of each other sooner or consider their marriage a mistake, for while California is declaring her marriages null and void by the thousands, in eleven states there are less than 10 annulments annually, and in only six states are there more than 100 annulments per year.

Haste usually marks the legal efforts to untie the marital tie by annulment, one-third of such marriages being dissolved during the first year, the federal census shows, while approximately 80 per cent are abandoned within the first five years.

The most frequent grounds causing the dissolving of the matrimonial barque by annulment is fraudulent representation, truth apparently being at a premium during the courting, particularly if unpleasant. The next most frequent charge is bigamy, although in California it leads with 460 cases, and the third cause is that one of the parties was "too young to marry."

"Forced to marry," or duress is the cause of only 1.5 per cent of all the annulments, while 3.2 per cent of them are caused by impatience to wed before a final decree was granted in a previous marriage. Only five of the Californians seeking freedom by abolishing the marriage claimed that they were intimidated into trotting to the altar.

Duping the husband or bride-to-be regarding one's character, criminal record, physical condition and so on are the causes for 441 of the annual California annulments. Two were granted in this state because the marriage was "a joke," and two because the purpose of the wedding was to defraud the other spouse out of property.

Insanity not being a cause for divorce in California, it was sought as a cause for annulment in 131 cases. Fewer annulment suits are contested that divorce suits and usually only in case of minority.

Jury Finds Drowning In Lake Accidental

A coroner's jury which heard details of the drowning of Miss Aileen Stroecker, 25, in Searsville lake Sunday, found the death of the young woman to be from accidental causes. The chief witnesses at the inquest were Frank A. Smith, an uncle of the young woman, Miss Greta Brandsten, one of the proprietors of the lake resort and the chief life guard at the lake.

Miss Stroecker was swimming near the raft when last seen alive. It is believed that she suffered a heart attack while in the water, as her uncle reported that she had two attacks of that nature earlier this year. The investigation was conducted at the parlors of Layng & Tinney by Coroner J. C. McGovern.

All are invited to come and listen to the debate on the report. The commission has laid out the town into residenial, business and industrial districts, and have given much time and attention to the work. Those interested should be present and be prepared to offer suggestions.

SAFETY DESIRED IN AUTO RATHER THAN SPEED

Nash Builder for Less Advertising of Speed

Impressing the individual motorist with his personal responsibility in safeguarding American lives is the one direct and effective method of reducing traffic fatalities today.

And the individual motorist cannot be expected to realize and assume this vital responsibility so long as automobile manufacturers stress high speeds as the feature of their products, in the opinion of E. H. McCarty, vice-president and director of sales of the Nash Motors Company.

"It is true that improvement in streets and highways and in the mechanical operation of the newest cars themselves is tending to increase the margin of traffic safety," he said today after studying the latest traffic fatality reports; "but it is also true that there is a general tendency toward excessive speeds both on the open road and traffic arterfes of our big cities.

"Because of this tendency toward reckless driving, I am heartily in accord with the appeal made by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce against the stressing of high speeds in automobile advertising. It is only natural that, when the high speed of his car is constantly brought to an owner's attention and when speed rivalry is made a public point of issue by various automobile makers, the ordinary driver will enter into the spirit of the industry and use this necessary but dangerous element on every possible occasion. Safety experts agree that speeding and its consequent reckless driving and disregard for the rights of others is the major cause of automobile deaths. Obviously, so long as speed is encouraged and made an issue among manufacturers, these deaths are going to mount.

"Power and flexibility are, after all, the essentials of the modern motor car. Speed ranges are the result rather than cause of these essentials. Because of the power and flexibility built into the new "400" Series of Nash cars, for example, they have a proved and safe high speed range of from seventy to eighty miles an hour, depending on the models. They are all capable of much more speed than the ordinary driver should use, and the experienced driver will employ this elemen only in emergencies. We certainly will not encouarge him to drive eighty miles an hour just because that speed is built into his car."

Mrs. R. J. Letts, deputy county recorder, sailed this week on the S. S. Harvard, accompanied by Mrs. Bess Bliss of Oakland. The ladies will visit at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Cook at Whittier.

Mrs. J. H. Heltzel and her foster daughter have gone to Long Beach to spend a brief vacation by the seashore.

MENLO PARK

Menlo Park deserves much credit for the manner in which it received Herbert Hoover, the republican nominee for president of the United States, last Friday. The main street through town was beautifully decorated. The city took on a carnival appearance in doing honor to the great man When Mayor Weeden entered the automobile with Hoover, the latter remarked that Menlo Park was the best decorated city he had passed through and was complimentary as to the appearance of the place he had passed many happy days of his youth. The republican nominee was given an ovation by the throngs on the streets as he went through on his way to Palo Alto. The cost of the decorations was $100, the sum of $80.25 being subscribed by the people and the balance of $39.75 was paid by the city council. The Palo Alto city council apropriated the sum of $2000 for similar work. The people subscribing in Menlo Park were as follows: American Trost Co., W. H. Weeden, Ellis Lumber Co., Campbell Auto Camp, W. E. Dale, H. A. Chandler, Harm Drug Co., W. E. Monroe Tom Furman, Eddie Feeley, W. L. Roper, Bicycle Shop, Denton Pigeon Farm, M. & H. Restaurant, V. Dupont, Der-Brothers, Ike Kraner, Knight and Bracesco, City Garage, Henry Bucher, Boggess Tire Co., Buckman Service, Menlo Park Garage, H. Doughty, M. McCarthy, Nellie Fletcher and A-1 Taxi.

The city council met Tuesday evening, with all members present. Counciman Walker inquired of Building Inspector Smith if a permit were granted for a small building on the Hermosa tract. Smith explained that he had not been there but wold look into the matter at once and grant the permit. Walker was inclined to believe that the structure was not according to the building laws.

Building Inspector Smith reported that permits had been issued during July covering buildings, amounting to $9,040.

Commissoner Walker called the attenton of the council to a fruit stand erected on Live Oak street by C. R. Henshall and wanted to know if a permit were granted by the inspector. Smith replied that he did not think it was necessary to issue a permit inasmuch as the building was only temporary and of no value. Walker thought it a disgrace to Menlo Park. Dale said it was a menace and ought to be removed. After much discussion the matter of a permit was continued until the next meeting on motion of Blake seconded by Ellis.

Chief of Police Furman reported that the sum of $60.25 had been collected from the townspeople for the decorations of the city for the home-coming reception of Herbert Hoover and there was a balance of $39.75 still due the decorateor. On motion of Blake, seconded by Ellis that sum was appropriated by the council to make up the defficiency.

The city clerk reported that the amount of money on hand at the last report was $4026.82. The totals receipts in July was $1438, making a total of $5,474.82, disbursements of $400, leaving a balance in the treasury of $5,074.82.

The claims allowed at the meeting were as follows:

Fannie I. Kurtz, supplies and salary, $56.30; Thomas Furman, salary and claim of street sweeper, $164; Edward Feeley, $150; Palo Alto Improvement Club, rent $35; K. B. Syngfeld, $22.61, signs; James Jones, janitor, $13.33; A. Esconne police duty, $16; George Whitworth, salary, $50; F. W. Johnson for planning commission, $100; Remington Rand CoC. desk, $269; C. Smith, salary, $21.25; W. Charles, painting street, $19.12; Remington Rand Co., type writer $121.50; L. W. Cook, salary, $33.33; Menlo Park Hardware Company, hardware, $41.85; Superior Decorating Co., $39.75; J. L. Ash Co., painting, $21.

A communication was read from Hoag of Palo Alto congratulating the council and the people of Menlo Park for the interest manifested in the public meeting of the planning commission. He urged the council to stand behind its planning commission and offered the support of Palo Alto in all progressive movements for the betterment of both communities. The communication was ordered filed.

No further business appearing the council adjourned to meet on August 7th.

Arthur Fowle and his charming wife are spending their vacation with relatives in Menlo Park. Mr. Fowle has been a member of the San Francisco police force for a quarter of a century and will soon retire on a pension. He intends to live here to pass his declining years.

Mrs. Mark Loughlin, the efficient and gracious local teacher, arrived home on Sunday from a trip to Canada. Her journey through the Canadian Rockies was much enjoyed by her.

Hereafter meetings in the city hall will not be disturbed by the clicking of the old typewriter. The council has purchased the city clerk an up-to-date noiseless typewriter that works like a charm.

Miss Pearl McCormick, the charming young deputy in the Social Welfare office at Redwood City and a resident of Menlo Park, has departed for Canada, her old home, to spend her annual vacation.

Since Saturday last Corpus Christi Monastery has been thronged by people from all sections of the bay counties and from points east. The monastery building has been opened to the public since that time and will be closed this afternoon at 5 o'clock. At 4.30 Rev. Richard Gleason, S. J. of San Jose will preach the sermon to be followed by benediction. Thousands that have visited the monastery during the past week were struck with the simplicity of the interior, the simple life of the good sisters, the great sacrifices they are making for mankind and the noble work they are doing for the world. The happiness of the sisters is depicted upon their saintly faces and demonstrated by their pleasing demeanor. The white-hobed sisters were congratulated encouraged and praised for their efforts on behalf of mankind. This afternoon the monastery will be positively closed for all time so those desiring to go through it may do so today. Tomorrow the ceremony of blessing the building will take place. At 10 o'clock a solemn high mass will be celebrated. Archbishop E. J. Hanna and Bishop Mitty of Salt Lake and a number of clergy from the bay counties will be present. Benediction in the afternoon is to conclude the ceremonies.

The public chapel will always remain open for adoration and inspection. As many as possible should come this afternoon to listen to the eloquent words of Fater Gleason who will explain the objects and benefits to be derived from the institution. The sermon on Sunday afternoon by Father Acock of St. Patrick's Seminary was eloquent and masterly. He told of the good work being done by the sisters, who by their sacrifices and prayers and devotion were friends of God and thus close to Him and in a position to seek favors for those who place trust in them. God loves those that make sacrifices for Him and will always listen to their prayers. Father Gabisch preached on Wednesday afternoon, delivering a forcible sermon on the Life of St. Domnick, patron of the monastery. He paid a glowing tribute to the noble sacrices of the good sisters and to the good work they are doing. All these conferences were largely attended

Te bazaar conducted by the ladies of the peninsula is meeting with unqualified success. The patrons of the affair are working hard to make it so. All the booths have been well patronized by the visitors. The bevy of young ladies at the booths are charming and beautiful and they worked like trojans for the good of the cause. This is the last opportunity to visit the interior of the monastery and all should come this afternoon to make an inspection of the big building with its gray walls and massive columns.

Miss Zita Thomas, the very pretty and charming debutante, has returned from Corvallis, Oregon. where she attended summer school The young lady is majoring in home economics.

J. C. Ellis, city trustee, will leave tomorrow for the high Sierras to catch trout a la Hoover.

E. M. Rankin reports the sale of another house in his subdivision on Freemont avenue to A. McFaul. He states this section of Menlo Park is showing considerable activity, judging from the number of inquiries being made for property in that part of town. He also states that the proposed advent of the Western Pacific into peninsula territory is no doubt responsible for some of the activity displayed and predicts a fine future for eMnlo and environs.

SAN MATEO COUNTY POSSESSES 9,500 HEAD OF CATTLE

Value of State Stock Set At $193,301,000

By LAWRENCE MONFORT
(Staff Correspondent)

SACRAMENTO, July 30—The state of California has $183,301,000 of its wealth 'on the hoof" today, a permanent investment, which despite its tendency to seek green fields, is under control and in constantly increasing in value. That staggering sum represents the current wealth of the state's milk and beef cattle, its swine and sheep, its horses and mules. The domestic animal population is on the increase, except as to harness stock and San Mateo county is sharing proportionately in this increase and wealth.

Despite the heavy liquidation in cattle during 1924 and 1925, the past two years have brought a steady gain in the bovine population of farms and ranges until today, according to G. H. Hecke, director of agriculture, the state has 622,000 milks cows, worth $83) per head as compared with 596,000 cows valued at $78 per head last year. Of this number, San Mateo county has 9,500 cows with a total value today of $788,500.

All other cattle, including range stock, Hecke estimates today make a grand total of 1,956,000 for state, with a value per head of $54.90 or a total worth of $109,583,000 as compared with 1,956,000 head in the state last year, when the value per animal was but $49.50. Of this range and calf population, San Mateo county is accredited with 5800 head with a total aggregate value of $319,000.

California, outranked only by Texas, as the leading sheep-producing state leads that southern comonwealth in sheep values by $1,000,000 due to a higher valuation on the 3,528,000 head now pasturing here, according to the agricultural chief. Values per head are $8.50 today as compared to $7.50 last year and on this basis, San Mateo county's 18,000 head are worth $153,000. The sheep population has increased from 2,900,000 in 1920, despite the deflattion years of 1920 and 1921.

Attempted Robbery At Searsville Lake Balked by Clerks

Three young men appeared at the Searsville store operated by Mr. and Mrs. Brandsten at their resort at Searsville lake, Tuesday and told the clerks in charge at the store that they had been sent by Brandsten to check over the stock.

When, however, the three supposed checkers opened the till to check over the money in the cash register, they became alarmed and attacked the trio. Two of the men made their escape but the other was held until Acting Sheriff Edward Farrell arrived on the scene.

The man who had been retained gave his name as Louis Solomon and his occupation as a jewelry salesman of San Francisco. In his pocket was found roll of telephone slugs wrapped in paper to resemble a roll of $20 in quarters. It was concluded that the three planned to count the cash in the till and insert the roll of slugs in place of a roll of quarters.

Solomon gave the names of his companions as Jimmy Erich and Ernie Wilson. Warrants for the arrest of the three were issued at the request of Undersheriff Farrell and charges of burglary were placed against Solomon. His two companions are being sought by peninsula police.

Glass or Granite Dishes Correct for Refrigerator

It is excellent practice to have special dishes for your ice bix, just as you have cooking utensils for various uses. Have a special shelf in your pantry for those dishes so they will always be ready for instant use.

That is the advice of the home economics department of the California Association of Ice Industries that recommends granite ware or special glass ware as best for refrigerator use as it may be cleaned thoroughly and will not rust. Never put a tin receptable in the ice box, the home economist says.

An assortment of glass topped fruit jars will be found of great value in keeping salad dressings, fruit and left-over foods, the report continues. If you have certain uses and have a definite plan for the placement of the dishes in the refrigerator, you will find it a very easy matter to keep your ice box clean, always in order and free from food odors.

Keep food out of the ice chamber. If it is necessary to chill cream, egg whites or gelatine, pour into a shallow pan, cover and place directly on top of the ice a few moments.

The Colfax Bookplate

By Agnes Miller

W.N.U. SERVICE.

"One minute, please, Miss Grosvenor," interrupted Mr. Almy; "your cousin was not in business here was he? How would he have had to make arrangemets for a short trip?"

"He was studying Spanish; he had a lesson every day. But he quit readily—too readily!—that he felt sure he could go; and he and my grandfather exchanged such a queer look; they never knew I saw it, they were so absorbed in themselves. But it was plain that they understood each other about some secret. My grandfather had shown no special interest in the notice about the auction until Clarihew's 'Notes' was mentioned, and then so much, and such determination to conceal it from me, that I felt there was something strange involved, something about me, that the other two didn't want me to suspect.

"Well, I was roused. I wondered if things were possibly shaping to give me a chance to find out about the secret which had always surrounded my parentage; you know I had never been told anything about my father and mother—"

"By your grandfather?" asked Mr. Almy.

"Nor by Charles," answered Julia; "and I always thought he must have known something about them. He's enough older than I am to remember or to have picked up something about my mother."

"Do you know how old you were when she died?"

"Four months old. I was told that by an old colored nurse of mine who had been in the family for decades, and who had waited on my mother; she also said my mother died of tuberculosis. She took care of me only when I was very tiny, for she was sent home to Virginia for telling me as much as that. My suspicions about the book were nothing but suspicions; yet I was so distressed and vexed that I just made up my mind to go to Richmond myself, and look at that book, and see what was so interesting about it!

"So I went. I wanted to avoid Charles, so I decided not to go to the auction, but to the exhibition room early in the day. And there, first thing, I nearly ran straight into him! Gracious! I was frightened! But there was a large showcase not far from where he was standing beside the counter, so I waited behind that until he should leave. I saw him looking at a book very carefully; I couldn't, of course, see what book it was, but I watched him closely, and . . . I saw him trying to pry the bookplate off with his finger nail! And then I heard him order the clerk to take a bid from him, for Clarihew's 'Notes,' up to five hundred dollars, for he said he couldn't attend the auction."

"That was curious, after he went down especially to accommodate your grandfather," remarked Mr. Almy.

"Not at all, if you knew him," said Julia, coolly. "He has many friends in Richmond, really a large social circle. He didn't want to go down solely on account of that book, I assure you. And five hundred dollars! Judging from what little I knew about some of the prices my grandfather paid for similar books, it wasn't worth one hundred! He might well have been sure he would get it. Then he went out, and I went and asked for the book, to examine it. And when I got it, I almost fainted. It didn't have a real bookplate in it at all!"

"No," said I, "it had a drawing that would deceive almost anybody but an artist."

"It was a wonderfully skillful piece of work," said Julia. It seemed very strange to me that anyone would make a drawn bookplate, unless for some special book, in event, perhaps, of accident to the metal plate from which the regular bookplates were engraved. I wondered what there was about that very queer bookplate that made my two relatives so anxious to conceal it from me. I was distracted; I hadn't an idea what to do, until I heard a voice asking for that book. It was Mr. Burton's; I recognized it at the auction. It gave me my idea.

"Charles wasn't going to the sale; some one else was interested in the book. I then and there resolved to go to the auction in the faint hope that some one might outbid Charles. In that event, I resolved to find out who it was, and keep track of the book until I could either learn the truth about it or perhaps even buy it. If Charles succeeded in getting the book, I felt sure I'd have little chance of ever seeing it again. I can't tell you how his attitude and my grandfather's terrified me! The rest of the story you know, for Mr Burton got the book."

"A very clear, interesting account of your experiences, Miss Grosvenor!" said Mr. Almy. "I'm much obliged to you, and I shan't trouble you further today if I can help it. May I just use your telephone a moment, if you please?"

The door closed on him. My real chance to speak to Julia Grosvenor had come at last.

"Yes," I said quietly, "Peter Burton got that book; and I know why, and so do you. It was for your sake. It was to help you out of a difficulty he didn't understand at all. He did it out of pure chivalry, because he knew you were in great need of just that service. You can see he has not broadcast his deed, either. Mr. Almy's source of information about Richmond is the clerk from the galleries. And ever since that purchase, Pete has been in no end of hot water."

Julia groaned—moved, indeed, far beyond what I had expected.

"What has happened?" she gasped.

"Mr. Darrow was furious over the price, to begin with. Peter Burton bore the blame in silence. The legal society which had ordered the book—for which Peter ostensibly bought it—then refused it. Then your recognition of him in the shop on Monday caused a great deal of comment, which he entirely ignored. He is not in the best of spirits; but if I know Peter Burton—I have known him seven years—he is seeing this thing through without flinching. So I can't help hoping you'll finish your story, Miss Grosvenor; tell us all you know about the mystery surrounding your grandfather's death; clear yourself of suspicion, for suspicion does hang over you. Oh, don't make a poor return for the unswerving confidence shown in you by this week of silence and suffering!"

Julia's face was blanched, her breath came in gasps. At first she could not speak; when she finally raised her eyes from the floor, they were again full of tears.

"Oh," she whispered huskily, "but you don't know how poor my best return would be—"

She was interrupted. A latch key sounded in the front door. Charles MacIvor stood before us.

But before he could speak, Mr. Almy had stepped back into the room. So Mr. MacIvor, on taking me in, had no opportunity to comment on the presence in "his" house of one he had ordered out of it the previous evening, though from his expression he was not pleased. Julia grew very uneasy, but Mr. Almy, placid and self-possessed, inquired politely what was wanted.

"I came to see my cousin on personal matters," said MacIvor, coldly.

"By which," Mr. Almy responded "you mean that bookplate you want out of Clarihew's 'Notes.' There it is, look at it."

Taken aback as MacIvor was by this unexpected answer, he could not restrain his eagerness to see the bookplate. He snatched it breathlessly from the other man's hand, and like Julia, turned it over, only to see the blank back. In stupefaction, he stared at it fully half a minute, then turned on his cousin, white with rage and badly frightened, but attempting to conceal his fright under bluster.

"Thought you'd get ahead of me again, did you?"

"I don't know what you mean, Charles," said Julia.

"Likely story! Got the bookplate through your new confidante, Miss Fuller, did you? I don't think you'd arouse all her sympathies if you told her your whole story."

"Miss Fuller brought me the bookplate because she knew I had an interest in it," cried Julia, aroused. "I have as much right to it as you have!"

Charles opened his eyes.

"'As much!'" he echoed; "'as much!'" He looked at her hard, studying her. "How much is that?"

She looked back at him innocently.

"I know you and grandfather both wanted that book, Clarihew's 'Notes,'" she said quietly, "and I know I wasn't allowed to go and get it, so I suspect that there may be something about it you don't want me to know."

"What?"

Her natural sincerity gave her away.

"I don't know," she admitted.

"You don't know!" repeated Charles, triumphantly. "You just implied it was the bookplate. Be careful, Julia; you're stumbling. What was it about the bookplate that interested you?"

I felt he was testing her to see how much she knew. I glanced at Mr. Almy, imploring him silently to stop the questioning, but he did not see me. Julia looked at her cousin, affronted.

"Perhaps it was the same thing that interested you, when you tried to pry it off the cover in the exhibition room at Richmond!" she flung at him.

He almost sprang out of his seat. "You were there, were you?" he cried. "Spying on me?"

"I have as much right in any exhibition room as any one!" cried Julia. "Don't dare speak to me that way! Why were you so interested in the bookplate yourself?"

"You'll never know that!" sneered her cousin. "And a lot of good the bookplate has done you, hasn't it? Keep it!" He gave it one final appraising glance and flung it on the table.

"I will keep it," returned Julia, calmly; "or, rather, Miss Fuller will. She has charge of it." And she handed it to me.

His suspicions blazed up again.

"You've been lying to me! That bookplate's not all there! The idea of pretending you don't know what I'm talking about!"

"If," said Julia, reflectively, "taking all our circumstances into consideration, part of the bookplate is not there, according to your judgment, and if there is something secret about it which I must not know because it would be to my advantage and against yours, I guess that you were expecting to find down at Richmond some document which would give me a right to part of the estate!"

"So this is why you've been in cahoots with all that gang at Darrow's—Burton, and his sister, and this woman. Anybody else?" he stormed.

"I haven't an idea what you mean!" cried Julia.

"You've been working against me, after the special kindness I showed you!" The emphasis in his words was deadly.

Julia gave a start, and looked frightened, but did not reply. Mr. Almy, however, broke promptly in:

"'Special kindness.' Since it suits your taste to refer to such a thing, MacIvor, you'll not mind saying if you mean that trip you made to Darrow's Thursday night?"

Charles MacIvor sprang from his chair.

"That d—d sneak Case!" he shouted. "So he's a friend of yours too, is he, Julia?"

"He certainly is—a good one!" cried Julia, outraged. "You shan't speak so of him! He was here today to offer me the aid refused me, by the men of my own family—and he a stranger! He said he knew you, had seen you off and on all your life; he warned me against you! And he did right!"

"He warned you against me, did he? And he told the police I broke into Darrow's late at night to steal, I suppose, by way of helping you?"

"No," interposed Mr. Almy, suavely, "Mr. Case did not mention the circumstance."

MacIvor turned violently on his cousin.

"Then you did! You're the one person who knew I was going, and you knew well why! For your own safety, you try to betray me, do you?"

"Charles," Julia denied, "I did not say one word about it!"

"Do you expect me to believe that? Who did, then?"

"I did," said I, boldly, "I saw you at my desk, from where I was standing in the north gallery!"

"Then it's a conspiracy against me, in behalf of you, is it?" shouted the infuriated MacIvor to his cousin. "Very well, then it's time for me to explain why I went to Darrow's. Here's the reason!"

Heedless of her cry, of her hand stretched out to stop him, he dashed to the rear of the room, threw open one of the glass-doored bookcases, and snatched a small object from a lower shelf.

"That's what I went to get!" he cried, and flung it on the table, while Julia, overcome by his fury, sank back and covered her face with her hands.

Mr. Almy picked up the small object.

It was a cube-shaped brass box, the bases of which were about an inch and a half square. He revolved it slowly in his hand, and we could see it from every angle. From the top protruded a thick black metal shaft nearly an inch in length, out of a wide slot about half the length of the base. Beside this shaft, in the very center of the top, was a flat black screw that stood out perhaps a quarter of an inch on the round base of its own, sunk into the box. On the side of the box, just below the shaft, was a small black lever projecting from a small slot. And on the bottom, as he slowly turned it toward me, I saw—a pattern of slots which I instantly recognized! Straight across the bottom base they ran, in just the formation I had seen elsewhere, clinching for me that conviction which had instantly sprung to my mind as Mr. Almy picked up the instrument: I had seen it on the bookplate in miniature; I had seen the pattern of these slots on my yellow note!

But I had little time to do more than identify the instrument. Mr. Almy grasped the box in his left hand and tentatively pressed the shaft. It slid readily along the wide slot in the top, and reaching the other end, stopped there, caught in place by the springing back of the small black lever in the small slot just below. But as he had pressed the shaft, he had held the bottom of the box toward me, and from each slot I had seen a small sharp blade flash, all of them in one moment, describing a semicircle and disappearing again into the box as the lever sprang.

And now Mr. Almy let go of the shaft and pressed the little lever. And as he did so, the action of the instrument was reversed: with lightning swiftness, the flashing little blades all sprang out again from their hiding-place inside the box, describing a semicircle in the opposite direction to their first course, and vanished, with a loud click that shattered the silence in that strange old-fashioned room!

Carillon Playing at Its Best in Belgium

Belgium is the classic land of bells. To the Belgians belongs the honor of having first felt and used bell tones as truly musical sounds, and, accordingly, they devised that colossal musical instrument and tower and belfry known as the carillon. The carillon is a set of from 15 to 50 or more bells cast in sizes that sound each its own scale tone. This battery of bells is played from a keyboard placed in a room below the open or latticed belfry, by a carilloneur, as the French call him, Dr. Henry Eames, president of the Society of American Musicians, writes, in Child Life Magazine. The keyboard is not unlike an electric switchboard, with its handles replacing the keys on an ordinary piano keyboard, and another set of pedal keys, like that on a pipe organ, to be played upon by the player's feet. This carillon keyboard stands today practically the same as it did in the Sixteenth century, when the most famous of all bell-casting and carillon-playing families—the Van den Gheyns of Belgium—brought the art of belfry playing to its highest point. The Antwerp cathedral carillon has 65 bells, St. Rombold's singing tower in Malines has 44, Bruges 41, Ghent 39 and Louvain 40.

Don't Blame the Women

Nothing is going to stop the prodigality with which women spend time and money on cosmetics because not only women, but the men who admire them, are convinced that it is worth all it costs.—Woman's Home Companion.

Indian Names

Indian place-names, it is pointed out, may refer to physical characteristics of the place, to incidents in the history of the time, or to associations of a tribe with a region. Examples may be seen in Saskatchewan river (swift flowing), Battle river (place of numerous battles) and Ottawa river (river frequented by the Ottawa tribe).

Another point is that Indian tribes generally had two names—the name they gave themselves and the name given them by their enemies—and in many cases the names which have been used by the white man have been "enemy" names. This accounts for the very uncomplimentary names which some Indian tribes bear.

One Wild Beast That Defies Power of Man

In the eternal game of "tag" between man and the animals he has hunted, there is only one beast known to man that has never been caught. Every zoo in the world would like very much to get the white rhinoceros to be found in large numbers near the rivers of the Sudan, but none has thus far been successful.

It has been found so hopeless to attempt to catch a white rhinoceros alive that the government at Khartoum has forbidden the hunting of this strange animal. Compared with the white rhino, lions and elephants are easy marks. He will kill his hunter or himself. At first sight of a human the white rhino charges. If the hunter evades his fierce onrush, the rhino will, in his blind rage, charge the first substantial object within his reach, with a ferocity terrible to behold.

It is the only animal which, threatened with captivity, will deliberately commit suicide. Young white rhinos which were captured by natives died within a very short time, so sensitive are they to captivity. If it were possible to catch them, they would keep up their frenzied charges until they killed themselves.

The London zoo authorities have offered thousands of pounds for a specimen of the white rhinoceros, and until the ban of the Sudan government was established, practically every native in the section tried to catch one. It was the great slaughter of the beasts in an effort to capture one alive which resulted in the law against hunting the white rhino, which seems determinedly to prefer death—his death or the hunter's—to captivity.

Games and sports were advocated before the National Education association by James Edward Rogers, director of the National Physical Education service as means of "teaching those traits of character that are essential to good citizenship."

Asserting that the world needs sportsmanship in its international and business relationships, he declared that physical education "teaches sport not for sport's sake, but for the sake of sportsmanship."

"There is a close correlation between physical fitness and personal efficiency in business, success in human relationships and happiness at home and abroad," he said.

"A physically fit person is more likely to be efficient, happy and useful. A physically fit nation is better prepared to meet any emergencies either from within or without. Industrial waste from inefficiency and illness can be substantially reduced through better physical fitness programs."

Is THIRTY the Love Deadline?

Fannie Ward, according to the consensus of available records, was born in St. Louis in 1872. She made her theatrical bow at the age of twelve years. Several later she became affiliated with Daniel Frohman and made her first hit as "Cupid" in a tremendous extravaganza in England where she met and married Joe Lewis, a famous diamond millionaire who was one of Cecil Rhodes' partners. Returning to the stage in this country many years later, she married Jack Dean, the marriage which is alluded to in this article. Fannie Ward, no doubt the youngest looking "old" woman in the world, has naturally been besieged with requests and suggestions that she reveal some of her beauty secrets. Accordingly, she headed a beauty salon in Paris many years ago.

By FANNIE WARD

The psychologist, William Durant,
Says maturity love is all cant.
That a man over thirty
Is just flighty and flirty.
Oh William Durant, you do rant.

I cannot imagine how the eminent doctor, when he made the statement quoted in the above limerick, came to that extraordinary conclusion.

To be sure, in many Oriental countries marriage is solemnized at the "natural" age. And to make it's success assured they lock up the wife and let the man have as many more wives as he is financially able to take care of, and by this arrangement, he usually is incapable of loving devotion after the age of thirty, if we are to believe Katherine Mayo's "Mother India."

Youth, and when I say "youth," I mean the period of years previous to thirty, is generally recognized as a season to enjoy life in rather an indiscriminate manner.

The peculiar privilege of youth is not to think too much of consequences. As far as love is concerned, youth does not think at all in its adolescent years of psychological ignorance of sex and life and its laws.

I do not scoff at youthful love. Far from it. But I contend as the years pass we acquire a different outlook on people, and on life and its problems, and what may seem purest gold to the eyes of youth is so often apt to appear to maturer judgment rather tarnished tinsel.

Much has been written regarding the expediency or the inexpediency of early marriage and the psychologists are about equally divided in their opinion. The opposers of early marriage are almost unanimous in their chief objection, and that is that the offspring of youthful parent are not so strong either physically or mentally as the children of those of more mature age. And they claim that the perusal of the names of the world's most distinguished writers, statesmen, and scientists proves their contentions, although they admit many great men are eldest children.

The supporters of early marriage answer this assertion by claiming that this is because of the ignorance that the average modern civilized child is brought up in regarding sex matters and everything relating to the intimate relationship between man and woman in the marriage state, and the procreation and rearing of their offspring.

The modern youthful man and wife is forced to learn the fundemental laws of life by bungling experience and mistakes, coupled with overindulgences under the spell and glamour of their new relationship. Of course this ignorance can be overcome by the abolition of prudery and the correct education of the young in the natural laws of sex life and health, but until this is done, in my opinion, very early marriage is ill advised—to say the least.

Doctor Durant counsels parents to encourage children to wed at the natural age rather than the financial age. That might be splendid advice if we were living natural lives like the birds of the air, but can it be universally and sensibly applied to conditions as they now exist in modern civilized communities?

On married life's journey the rocks and torn-up places are much more frequently met with, especially at the start, than the smooth asphalt roadway, and the high cost of modern living has in no way reduced the problems of Mr. and Mrs. Newlywed.

What are the chances for the modern girl and boy in their "nicoteens" to make a success out of a bread and kisses marriage if they haven't the "dough" for the bread?

What about these children's children?

It is a far greater responsibility to create human life than to take it and any couple entering the marriage state, with its financial as well as its moral responsibilities, with no thought of the little ones that may come or the mouths to be fed, is embarking upon a sea of trouble from whose buffeting they are not liable to be the only, or chief sufferers.

Some people have advocated a marriage at the "natural" age with a restriction on child bearing until the age of twenty-five or thirty years. This would be living a two-part married life. The first part to study and learn life and the second part to produce and direct it.

But if a man, as Doctor Durant asserts, has this strange change in his nature around the age of thirty or over, how are we women going to protect ourselves against it, whether we are married to him already or about to be sacrificed on the hymeneal altar to his chameleon-like affections?

Are we in the future to hear a wife say in the divorce court, "Your honor, on his thirty-first birthday, he said he loved me no longer, and I said to him, 'Why, Egbert, last year you swore you loved me devotedly,' and he replied, 'Ah, ha, last year I was only thirty. Don't you know that Will Durant says that the divine passion ceases after the age of thirty? 'Away from me, woman, bring on the chickens; my magnetic currents need restimulating and if a flock of blondes should chase me, like Mr. Coolidge, I would not choose to run.'"

King Soloman had seven hundred wives and that is the worst case of "Durantitis" on record. No wonder they called him "Solemn man," and no wonder he formed the first night club and called it "The Free Masons," and barred all women from their meetings.

But if a man has a peculiar mental and physical change around the age of thirty, I very much doubt if the same applies to woman.

I was first married around the "natural" age, as the distinguished writer calls it, and after living an Andy Gump and Miss Existence for years I regained my freedom and my youth at the same time. Mental affinity is necessary to conjugal happiness as well as physical love and a too early marriage is liable, in most cases, to supplant ignorance for wisdom and youthful impulse for mature judgment.

I married again when I was in my "frivolous forties," fifteen years ago, and when I travel to France, as I do every year, the divorce court over there is the least interesting to me of all the European courts.

No "Woman's Exchange" for me of the Reno or Paris brand. In my opinion thirty years are none too long for many people to acquire the necessary mental and physical maturity to assume the responsibilities as heads of a family.

But after all, age is not solely a matter of years but of tissue changes

Brant Great Leader of American Indians

Capt. Joseph Brant, who has been called the greatest American Indian in all history, took to the warpath at the early age of thirteen years, and his first engagement was in the battle of Lake George against a French force in 1755. Recounting his experiences years later, he spoke mainly of this event, and the record of Reverend Doctor Stuart, a missionary who knew him well, quotes him as saying:

"This being the first action at which I was present, I was seized with such a tremor when the firing began that I was obliged to take hold of a small sapling to steady myself; but after the discharge of a few volleys I recovered the use of my limbs, and the composure of my mind, so as to support the character of a brave man, of which I was especially ambitious."

His warlike nature is illustrated by a second quotation of his:

"I like the harpsichord well, the organ better, but the drum and the trumpet best of all, for they make my heart beat quick."

In 1775 Brant made a journey to the English court to plead for his tribe, which he thought was being badly treated by the British government. He was well received and not altogether unsuccessful in his mission. On this visit he received a ring, engraved with his name, which he said he was going to wear so that he could be identified if killed in battle. Up to the time of his death he wore it, and afterward it was kept by his family as an heirloom. Finally it was lost, and years later a little girl picked it up in a plowed field at Burlington, N. J.—Detroit News.

Books Not for Women

In the early period women were not admitted to the Atheneum—except to its art gallery, which was Boston's first public collection of paintings. It did not occur to the proprietors that their wives and daughters should be allowed among the bookshelves. It was feared that the narrow galleries and steep staircases "would cause a decent female to shrink," and that "a considerable portion of a general library should be to her a closed book"; also that the presence of women "would occasion frequent embarrassment to modest men." The first woman to penetrate the portals was Hannah Adams, the historian, whose distinguished family connections among the trustees won her the victory in 1829. —John Clair Minot in the North American Review.

"That's because you murder it first!" decided the wag and the future grand opera star crossed his name off her party list.

The decision to resume the ancient name was made by the Norwegian parliament.

Seeking "White" Bird

Baltimore, Md.—Dr. James A. Nydegger, who has had considerable experience in exploring in Newfoundland, will lead a party afoot in an exploration trip to the tablelands of the island, in search of traces of the plane of Nungesser and Coli, who were lost while attempting the first westward flight of the Atlantic.

Confident that Nungesser's plane, the White Bird, spanned the Atlantic, only to meet disastrous head winds and be forced off her course, as was the Bremen, Doctor Nydegger says he will explore every mile of the interior of the island. He said:

"My impression is that they crashed against tall trees or a mountain while lost in fog. There were a dozen reports that persons had heard their motor along the coast. The Guggenheim foundation spent thousands of dollars searching from the air for traces of their plane, but if they were lost in the tablelands the wreck could not be seen from the air.

"The White Bird would disappear from sight like a baseball in grass three feet high. With two or three trusted guides I will follow the Grand Codary river into the dense woods of the island.

"I will send the guides back and forth across the island, crossing and recrossing until every mile of unexplored territory is covered. I am confident I will find traces of them.

"While I hold out no hope that they are alive, I believe we will find their wrecked plane. It is a little over a year since their brave attempt to fly from France to America failed, and it is not too late to make a final search.

"Nungesser's mother has always maintained that somebody will find the White Bird. I hope that I will be the fortunate man."

Made Fuel Pipe From Kelp Root

East Harpswell, Maine.—Patching a motor engine with seaweed and making it run is the latest achievement of Yankee ingenuity.

When Carroll Merriam started for a trip in his motor boat to haul his lobster pots he found that nocturnal marauders had stripped his craft. They stole oars, brass running lights, six cells of battery and oilskins, and, worst of all, they cut his six-foot copper gasoline feed line connecting the tank with the carburetor.

With no place within miles where he could obtain copper pipe, with no near neighbors and with an order to furnish fifty fine lobsters at 50 cents a pound for a noontime shore dinner, Merriam showed that Yankee ingenuity still flourishes.

He had a battery for a radio set in his home, and this he soon connected with his motor.

Then he rowed his dory out a few hundred yards to the Seal ledges, where he found a piece of kelp or devil's apron with an eight-foot stem that was hollow. Taking this ashore, he pushed one end over the end of the severed pipe projecting from his fuel tank and the other end left at the carburetor.

Wrapping them tightly many times from a roll of friction tape, he thus improvised out of the hollow stalk a fuel pipe line that enabled him to haul his traps and fill his order.

To Inherit $1,000,000 for Changing His Name

Omaha, Neb.—What's in a name? Millions, perhaps, for Seth Rosewater, the seventeen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Rosewater, New York.

Young Rosewater legally took the name Seth Warner Buchard last February, his mother said. The Rosewaters formerly lived here. The name is that of the young man's maternal uncle, Anson W. Buchard, formerly an official of the General Electric company, who died last year, Buchard left no heirs besides his widow.

The widow, Mrs. Allene Buchard, was understood to have proposed that Seth become her principal heir, provided he take the name of her husband and thus perpetuate the Buchard name. The Buchard estate has been valued at more than $1,000,000.

"My son has not been adopted," Mrs. Rosewater said. "He is merely going to carry on the Buchard name. Our name will be carried on by our eldest son."

FREE SALVATION

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

THEY were singing lustily at the revival meeting, and I was joining in with my cracked voice which was in the process, quite embarrassing to me, of changing.

"Salvation's free, for you and me,
I'm glad salvation's free."

Sam Gregory, who had accepted confidently the simple faith propounded by the evangelist, and had just been baptized in the stream which ran through Cloyd's pasture, took the song literally. He had done everything which the minister had laid down for him to do; he was quite at peace and in his simple mind, for he told me so, he was safe for all time and safe for eternity. There was nothing further for him to do. He had got something very precious to him practically for nothing, and that was a new experience for Sam.

But he was quite mistaken. We get nothing worth while in the world, and possibly nothing in the next absolutely free. We don't always pay what a thing is worth, but we pay, and it wasn't long before Sam knew that if he were to be saved there was a price to be paid. He had taken on some heavy obligations when he stood up and joined the church. There was a slight financial obligation, but this did not disturb him. He had never contributed before to the support of the church, barring the stray nickel which dropped into the contribution box when he had a girl with him at the evening service, but the five dollars which he would be expected to subscribe did not worry him.

But there were other things. He had been rather profane up to the time of his joining the church, and he had a high temper which must now be subdued, and he had despised some of the neighbors with whom he had done business, and now "Love one another, for love is the fulfilling of the law" was the commandment. Sam was game. He was in no way a grafter. When he made an obligation he met it, and he came to see that salvation isn't quite free. Nothing is. It must be paid for in love and sacrifice and self-control. It is worth all that it costs, but there is a price to be paid. Sam paid it. No one ever heard him utter a profane word after the revival was over. He lived in peace and harmony with his family and with his neighbors. He came in time to see that generous giving was an obligation which he could not evade if he would pay what he should, and he saw, too, that the debt he owed for the salvation which was dear to him was one which he could never really pay, any more than he could fully meet the debt of obligation which he owed to his mother, and so he kept on trying to pay until the end.

Merely to accept a religious creed he saw was not enough. It didn't make him safe even for all time much less for eternity, it simply piled upon him a debt which try as he might he could never fully wipe out.

Uruguay Fruit Growers Win Government Aid

Begin Classifying of 7,200 Kinds of Plants

Washington. — The classification and identification of a large collection of tropical flowers, ferns and plants gathered last winter in the lofty mountains and dense jungles of eastern Colombia, some of which have never before been seen by an American, is the summer's task confronting Dr. Ellsworth P. Killip and Albert C. Smith of the Smithsonian institution.

Doctor Killip, assistant curator, and Mr. Smith, collaborator in the division of plants of the national museum, spent four months in the eastern cordillera of Colombia north of the Bogota region and brought back nearly 30,000 specimens.

These included 800 "collecting numbers" of ferns, 300 of orchids, more than 200 of the mimosa and cassia families, about 75 morning glories and 100 passion flowers. Sets of the specimens have been distributed among the various institutions co-operating in the expedition, which was part of the botanical exploration of northern South America begun in 1917 by the New York Botanical Garden, the Gray Herbarium of Harvard university, and the National museum.

When you have finished your business you are adding to the general smoothness of life's organization and to the happiness of your acquaintances if you will give up the floor to some one else. Where Arthur Ruled

Penzance, England. — A famous stretch of the Cornish cliff on the north shore of Cornwall, properly known as Church Cliff, will soon become a national monument if plans made by Rev. A. Blissard Barnes, vicar of Tintagel, come to maturity this year. This stretch of cliff, about 50 acres in area, stands as a bulwark against the Atlantic rollers, and commands magnificent views of a countryside which is rich with legends of Arthur Pendragon and his Knights of the Round Table.

Below the cliff, and within view from its top, is the precipitous island rock upon which are a portion of the ruins of an ancient castle, by popular belief the birthplace of the afterward celebrated King Arthur. Not far away is the stone marked Slaughter bridge, where many say the last battle of Arthur was fought, and where the last of the Pendragons received his fatal wound.

Doubt Arthur Ever Existed.

Milton, in his History of Britain, ramarks: "Who Arthur was, and whether any such person reigned in Britain, hath been doubted heretofore, and may again with good reason." Scholars and historians have pointed out that there is little evidence worth consideration that Arthur was more than the creation of natural myth. Yet to many Cornishmen, and to Englishmen and Americans as well, the heroic tales of the son of Uther, recorded first by Nennius in the latter half of the Ninth century, and spun since by poets and singers into a glistening web of fancies and romance, have made the figures as real and believable as those of the more authentic persons of history.

The proof of this lies in the number of English tourists who visit the ruins at Tintagel, the town at Camelford, the battlefield at Slaughter bridge, and other spots closely associated with the legend. In the last half-decade Americans, too, have found Cornwall. In increasing numbers the summer tourists have invaded the quiet country at the south of England to bathe on her white beaches at Penzance, Newquay, and Perranporth, to visit the famous tin mines near Redruth and Camborne, and to stand on the ground made famous by the tale of Arthur Pendragon, in the north.

Ruined Castle Draws Many.

The chief interest at Tintagel, of course, is the ruined castle, which is popularly referred to as King Arthur's castle and so represented to tourists. Regardless of the truth of this claim, the spot has genuine historic associations of later date, though it is now generally acknowledged that the crumbling ruins are of a period posterior to the Norman conqueror. A few English writers, however, moved to defend the legends of the Pendragon, have declared it possible that the castle, or some mansion or dwelling, must have existed there before the Conquest; that it was later restored by the Normans in their own style.

At any rate, there must have been some sort of castle on the Island of Tintagel, or Tintagol, when Geoffrey of Monmouth, the most believable of the early writers, recorded his version of the Arthurian legend, about the year 1147. At the close of that century, it seems evident, the Norman family of De Hornacot, seated at Hornacot, in North Hamerton, had a grant of the manor of Bossinney, including, no doubt, the Island of Tintagel. They thereafter took the name of Tintagel as a part of the family name, which is thought to indicate that there was some castle or mansion on the island for them to reside in.

The isle of Tintagel and the ruins upon it now belong to the prince of Wales, as duke of Cornwall. Much of the other land of especial note in the region is similarly protected for posterity. But the area along Church cliff, which is attached to the glebe land of the vicarage of Tintagel, is the property of the church, and as such may be sold at any time, provided proper authority is obtained from the ecclesiastical commissioners.

Since the increase in the tourist trade of the region began, the value of the land for building sites has steadily gone up. Rev. A. Blissard Barnes and others interested in the sentimental value of the cliff front have been alarmed lately lest an especially fine offer induces the church to sell, allowing the cliffs to fall into private hands.

Yellow Fever Heroism

The cause of the spread of yellow fever was learned only after great sacrifice of life and health on the part of American doctors and others who in Cuba allowed themselves to be bitten by mosquitoes which had previously bitten yellow fever patients. Dr. Jesse W. Lazear, the first to sacrifice his life, died at the age of thirty-four.

An attractive idea in lounging pajamas—this outfit is called the Apache pajamas. A modernistic block design trims the silver cloth coat and is repeated down the sides of the widely-flared red satin trousers. Modernistic jewelry is worn with this outfit.

1542 electric ranges just installed in our customers' homes

The Electric Range gives beauty, cleanliness and perfect baking to women who love modern methods.

That is the reason why 1542 of our customers installed Electric Ranges in their homes from May 1st to June 23rd.

The Electric Range has white porcelain enamel that makes kitchens attractive. It bakes perfectly. And it does it automatically. The oven heats up to 400 degrees in 9 to 11 minutes—as fast as one can mix biscuits. The open coil cooking elements are now made smaller to fit your pans. Heat that was formerly wasted goes to work. Food cooks faster—less electricity is used.

While you're downtown, stop in and see the new Electric Ranges.
